Gandhian Perspective: Solutions to Present Day Challenges

S B Singh

One of the most profound quotations of Mahatma Gandhi is: "My life is my message." What was his life and what was his message? Perhaps Gandhi is the most written - about personality of all time. Scholars, both Gandhian and non-Gandhian, have written in detail about his philosophy, his life, his contribution, and his legacy.

Gandhi and His Philosophy

Gandhi preached the basics of humanity, not its abstract principles. He never acted like an angel from the heaven and preaching from a high moral ground. He was simple, down to earth. Secondly, Gandhi was not a theoretician; he was a man of action. He always walked the talk. He always practiced what he preached. In fact, his precepts followed from his practice and experience. Thirdly, he was not so much into analysing the human predicament, but bringing a change in the human situation. Gandhi believed that change need not be revolutionary. His statement, "In a gentle way, you can shake the world" is testimony to his conviction that most profound changes come not with bloodshed, hatred and violence, but in a gentle, non-violent, peaceful manner.

Nelson Mandela, who adopted Gandhian methods to fight apartheid, rightly said that "Gandhi was born in India, but was made in South Africa." Gandhi developed and applied all his tools and techniques of struggle against injustice in South Africa first, and only then, in India. Gandhi chose non-violent means to attain freedom from British rule. He was not looking only for political change , but also change in all spheres of human activity. His action was targeted at health, cleanliness, education, uplift of the weaker sections, women, corporate world, environment, and everything else. This is a summary of his basic philosophy.

Truth: The moral aspects of truth include non-violence, self-control, and justice. In fact, truth constitutes the very foundation of life. Truth, in its absolute sense, makes its seeker one with god. Truth leads to non-violence and ahimsa, which is a positive virtue of kindness and compassion.

Non-violence: In the words of Gandhi, not to hurt any living being is ahimsa. But it also includes shunning evil thoughts, lying, hatred, and ill thoughts about others. Gandhi stated that "while violence is the weapon of the weak, non-violence is the weapon of the strong." The courage for non-violence comes from truth. Non-violent struggle is based on the willingness to understand the opponent's point of view and also its acceptance if it is the right view. Gandhian concept of non-violence remains a reliable approach to various conflicts that we witness today.

However, Gandhi was not a utopian and he knew well that absolute non-violence may not be possible in all circumstances. He was equally emphatic in stating that non-violence should not be equated with cowardice. Gandhi favored using violence over succumbing to cowardice, affirming, "I do believe that, where there is only a choice between cowardice and violence, I would advise violence."

Khadi in Contemporary Couture Weaving Tradition into Modern Fashion

Dr. Janmay Singh Hada

The Khadi movement initiated by Mahatma Gandhi in 1918 as a symbol of India's quest for freedom and economic self-sufficiency, has now seamlessly integrated itself into India's and even the global fashion landscape. Evolving from its historical roots in ancient craft traditions, Khadi represents a contemporary embodiment of Gandhi's call for self-sufficiency, aligning perfectly with the "Make in India" initiative, thus promoting local empowerment. This exceptional fabric encapsulates values such as self-reliance, sustainability, and resilience, earning it the title of "fabric of the nation." Khadi's rich history serves as a living testament to India's enduring ideals, interwoven into its cultural narrative. Just as Mahatma Gandhi harnessed its potential during the struggle for independence, Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi has also embraced Khadi as a symbol of his vision for self-reliance and empowerment in modern India.

Sustainable Fashion and Conscious Consumption

Khadi is not just a piece of fabric; it embodies aspirations for economic growth, social progress, and sustainable development. Hence, the India has been steadfast in its efforts to preserving this heritage while propelling modern advancement. Khadi spinning and weaving is by and large a non-polluting process as compared to mechanised textile production. Khadi's eco-friendly attributes align with the emphasis on environmental stewardship. The fabric's low carbon footprint echoes the advocacy for renewable energy and ecological preservation, underscoring a greener future for the nation. Hence, the global trend towards sustainable fashion has brought Khadi to the forefront as environmentally conscious consumers seek alternatives to fast fashion.

The Khadi Renaissance

In 1921, the establishment of the first Khadi production center in Kathiawad, Gujarat, marked the inception of a rich and enduring history that persists to this day.

Following India's independence, the Khadi Village Industry Commission (KVIC) Act of 1956 was enacted with the overarching objective of strategically planning, fostering, coordinating, and supporting the development

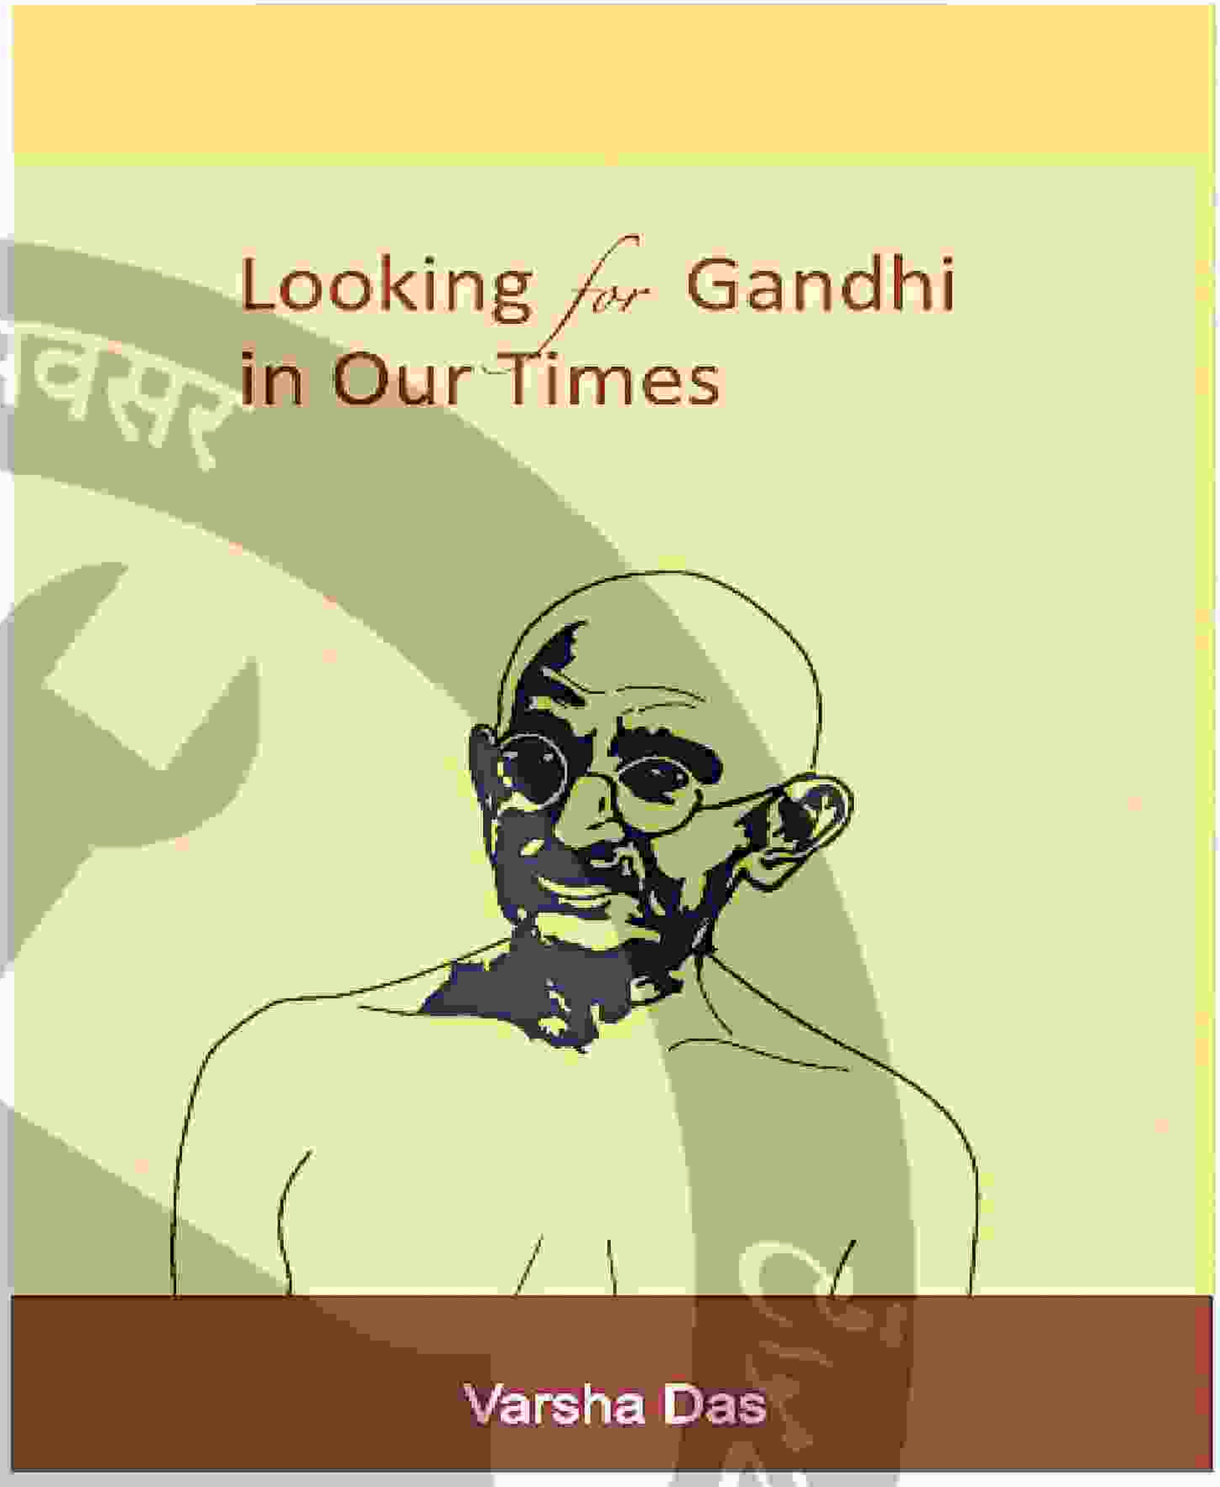
'Gandhian Perspective on Education'

Book Excerpt



The values that Mahatma Gandhi left behind have stood the test of time. Ms. Varsha Das, through her book, "Looking for Gandhi in Our Times," reinforces his idea of education, while highlighting the importance of holistic education in shaping responsible citizen of the nation.

While travelling on the ship from London back to South Africain 1909 Gandhiji had written his first and the most important book "Hind Swaraj" or "Indian Home Rule" in Gujarati. The 18th chapter of this slim book is on 'Education'. It has a pertinent question, "What is the meaning of Education? It simply means a knowledge of letters. It is merely an instrument and an instrument may be well used or abused. The same instrument that may be used to cure a patient may be used to take his life, and so may a knowledge of letters." Education, therefore, is the means to achieve an end. And the end is to become a discerning, compassionate, sincere human being.

"Education, according to Gandhiji is only a ladder to gather fruit from the tree of knowledge, not the fruit itself. He advocated such education in which hand, head and heart, all the three could be utilised with proper coordination and harmony. Any reform in any sphere of life had to be brought about by non-violent means, and that can be done by education." Gandhiji wrote this in the Harijan, dated May 8, 1937.

"By hand and the head we understand action and reasoning, but what is heart? Heart basically is the seat of emotions, our sensibility, empathy, sensitivity. It also signifies courage. When hand, head and heart are combined in various educational activities at any stage of life, the learning stays with the student, because it is not mere bookish knowledge but the process and the end result are experienced by the student. That experience is not one-dimensional but multi dimensional. A creative teacher of the 21st century will always be able to widen the scope of learning by utilising various modes of communication, like electronic media, folk media, animation, outdoor activities and trips, laboratory, library, and so on. The possibilities are unlimited."

Gandhiji pressed for initial education in one's mother tongue. Some critics interpret that he was against learning English. The readers of Young India know that Gandhiji regarded English as the language of international commerce and diplomacy and thus language knowledge is essential. Acknowledging that English language has rich treasure of literature, he asked those with linguistic talents to translate some of the best English literature into various Indian languages for the benefit of Indian readers. Gandhiji never believed in erecting barriers. But he did contend that 'appreciation of other cultures can fitly follow, never precede an appreciation and assimilation of our own.' He was aware of the fact that many deprecate or disapprove the study of rich Indian culture and do not value it and are actually depriving themselves of India's rich culture.

What I understood from Gandhiji's perspective of religion is that it teaches moral and ethical way of living harmoniously in the society. It has no miracles or superstitions, it does not divide people of different culture, language, or even religion, because it recognised fundamental goodness in all.

On the 16th of December 1928, while discussing the subject of Religious Education in schools and colleges, he wrote in Young India, "To me religion means Truth and Ahimsa or rather Truth alone, because Truth includes Ahimsa, Ahimsa being the necessary and indispensable means for its discovery. Therefore anything that promotes the practice of these virtues is a means for imparting religious education and the best way to do this, in my opinion, is for the teachers rigorously to practise these virtues in their own person."

"Gandhiji has spoken about his own continuous evolution. This is equally relevant for all of us. Without one's continuous process of new learning one would only keep repeating oneself. That would be boring for teachers as well as for students."

The times have changed, young peoples' aspirations have also changed. The other side of the fence always looks greener. I personally feel that one can certainly go abroad for higher study, Gandhiji also went to England and became a Barrister, but all that knowledge and experience were utilized for the betterment of India and her people. If we are conscious of our responsibilities towards our parents, society and the country we would certainly like to pay the debt of gratitude by offering our services to our country. That is why it is said that think globally but act locally.

"To discard bad and establish good is the process of value creation. It can also be called education, the ladder, as explained by Gandhiji. It is about creating value out of positive or negative experiences. Pre-requisite for manifesting this ability is creating a solid foundation of profound philosophy in one's life."

Achieving Balance: Understanding Water Neutrality

Avinash Mishra
Snigdha Goel

Water is the lifeblood of our planet. It's a surprising fact that approximately 70% of the oxygen we breathe is produced by tiny ocean plants known as phytoplankton. This process is vital for our survival. Water holds immense significance for agriculture, businesses, and our very existence. However, there's a growing concern: we are depleting our freshwater resources at an alarming rate, and water is becoming increasingly scarce.

In the last half-century, global freshwater consumption has nearly doubled, exceeding 4 trillion cubic meters annually. As our cities expand, a growing number of people are facing difficulties in accessing sufficient water. By 2050, it is estimated that between 1.7 billion and 2.4 billion urban residents worldwide will struggle to secure an adequate water supply, and India is expected to be one of the hardest-hit countries.

While on the one hand, rapid growth of cities and industries has led to increased water demand, on the other hand, climate change threatens to diminish our water supply. Globally, industry and energy contribute to 19% of total fresh-water withdrawals, including groundwater. Furthermore, in South Asia, 47% of water consumption goes towards industrial production, a figure expected to rise due to the rapid pace at which most of the region's economies are growing. Given these alarming statistics, it is easy to understand why the United Nations predicts a 40% shortfall in water supply by 2040 compared to demand.

In India, the distribution of the 4,000 billion cubic meters of available water is uneven across the country. To address this, we should either store the water in reservoirs or transfer it from surplus areas to deficit regions. However, both options face implementation challenges. Currently, our surface water storage stands at just below 260 billion cubic meters, with a potential increase to 300 billion cubic meters when ongoing projects are completed. Initiating new large storage projects often requires a lengthy period due to environmental considerations, resettlement and rehabilitation processes, investigations, and implementation issues.

Simultaneously, there exists a significant gap between sewage generation and treatment capacity. According to the 2021 report by the Central Pollution Control Board, urban India generates 72,368 million liters per day (MLD) of municipal sewage, while the installed sewage treatment capacity is only 31,841 MLD, covering just 44%. The traditional approach to water usage and disposal, characterised by business as usual, is no longer sustainable. To meet future water demands, the most viable option is to manage and utilise our available water resources with utmost efficiency and prudence.

New development projects often lead to increased water demand in a given region. If the watershed is already close to its limit, as is the case in many areas, any additional demand exacerbates water stress and conflicts. This further widens the gap in water availability among different segments of society. Naturally, the socio-economically disadvantaged sections will bear the brunt, thereby offsetting social progress.

In this context, the concept of water neutrality has emerged to raise awareness about the escalating water stress and inspire positive action. Water neutrality was first conceived by Pancho Ndebele at the Johannesburg World Summit for Sustainable Development (WSSD) in 2002. During the conference, the water consumed by delegates was quantified and translated into real monetary value. Attendees were encouraged to make the summit water-neutral by purchasing water-neutral certificates to offset their water consumption. The funds from these certificates were allocated to installing playpumps in water-deprived communities in South Africa.

A process, product, consumer, community, or business is considered water-neutral when its water footprint has been minimised, particularly in regions facing water scarcity or pollution. Additionally, the negative environmental, social, and economic consequences of the remaining water footprint are offset through a reasonable investment in projects aimed at the sustainable and equitable use of water. It is important to note that achieving water neutrality does not mean reducing the water footprint to zero but rather mitigating the environmental impacts of an activity. It has the potential to yield significant water savings and create water-saving credits similar to carbon credits.

Several major brands, including Facebook, Google, and Microsoft, have pledged to become water-neutral by 2030, committing to replenishing more water than they consume. Another exemplary initiative is the pledge made by the Telengana Government during the World Environment Day in 2023 announcing its intention to implement regulations promoting water neutrality in buildings, particularly high-rise residential and commercial structures.

Measures for Achieving Water Neutrality:

Shifting from a linear economy of "take, make, consume, and waste" to a circular economy of "make, use, recycle" is crucial. This transition involves adopting strategies to optimise water usage, known as the 5R's: reduce, reuse, recycle, recover, and restore. These strategies include reusing treated wastewater for drinking or irrigation, enhancing surface and groundwater storage through recharge techniques, identifying and addressing water loss points, and using smart meters and water-efficient devices. While reducing and reusing water are essential components of water management, offsetting measures are equally critical to attain water neutrality.

Offsetting water consumption entails making reasonable investments in projects that promote the sustainable and equitable use of water. These initiatives often involve collaboration with local authorities, industries, and NGOs. It is important to clarify that a reasonable investment does not mean that activities causing water pollution can be compensated for by investing in water-related projects. As part of offsetting, industries can invest in projects such as removing water-consuming invasive plant species, capturing stormwater to replenish underground aquifers, and reforesting areas damaged by wildfires.

Implementing water offset policies, as done in the United States, has proven effective in mitigating impacts. Developers are required to ensure that new construction projects do not lead to increased overall water demand. In other words, the projected water consumption for a new development must be offset by water use reductions in off-site applications before approval is granted. While water offsetting is a valuable measure, priority should be given to practicing the 5Rs.

Despite its potential, water neutrality is still in its early stages, necessitating consumer awareness. Several barriers hinder its effective implementation and adoption across the country, including the absence of industry targets, insufficient funding from both private and government sectors, a tendency to focus on offsetting rather than reducing and reusing, and, most importantly, a lack of public awareness.

Recently, NITI Aayog (National Institution for Transforming India) outlined a standardised approach to assess water neutrality for Indian industries. This framework aims to ensure sustainable water use and propose incentives based on the assessment.

As we work toward achieving water security by 2047, water neutrality will play a pivotal role. A successful water-neutral operation within a watershed leaves a legacy for future generations and fosters water-saving behaviors from an early age. To effectively implement this concept, India may develop a water neutrality policy that outlines fundamental principles and approaches governing water neutrality, along with corresponding targets to measure its impact.

Khadi in Contemporary Couture...

of Khadi and village-based industries in rural regions, in conjunction with other industrial sectors. Operating as a statutory entity under the purview of the Ministry of Micro, Small, and Medium Enterprises, the KVIC assumes a pivotal role in advancing initiatives to promote Khadi.

In recent years, the realm of Indian fashion has undergone a remarkable transformation. Khadi, once steeped in tradition, has experienced a resurgence in popularity, gracing fashion runways, art exhibitions, and the wardrobes of environmentally conscious consumers. Notably, the Khadi and Village Industries Commission (KVIC) has entered into agreements with some of India's largest textile mills to facilitate the global trade of Khadi products. Extensive research and development endeavors have also been dedicated to blending Khadi with contemporary fabrics, resulting in innovative solutions for modern clothing and fashion.

Khadi in Contemporary Fashion

What distinguishes the Khadi resurgence is its seamless integration into contemporary design aesthetics. Fashion houses and designers are in the midst of experimental forays, infusing Khadi with a modern twist while preserving its intrinsic authenticity. One notable illustration of this phenomenon is Khadi denim, a hybrid fabric that has left a substantial mark on the global clothing industry. Khadi denim blends the ruggedness of denim with the comfort and texture of Khadi, resulting in a distinctive fusion of tradition and trendiness. This amalgamation of the old and the new resonates with consumers seeking distinctive and meaningful fashion choices. At present, fashion houses and renowned designers are enthusiastically delving into numerous such creative possibilities on a global scale.

The evolution of Khadi from a symbol of rebellion to a fabric embraced by modern designers and business establishments is striking. Renowned textile brands have partnered with artisan clusters to curate exclusive Khadi collections. The KVIC Act empowers these collaborations by facilitating the promotion, marketing, and sale of Khadi, rural industries, and local handicrafts, as well as establishing connections with established market agencies.

This trend extends beyond mainstream brands, as luxury designers intentionally incorporate Khadi into their creations to infuse a modern edge into their designs flaunting the fabric's eco-friendly attributes, subtle texture, and impressive dye retention. There are many top fashion designers who masterfully utilise Khadi, often referred to as the "fabric of the poor," to craft bridal ensembles exuding a regal elegance suitable for royalty.

The National Institute of Fashion Technology (NIFT) actively collaborates with KVIC to introduce design interventions that incorporate Khadi into modern fashion. These collaborations serve to raise awareness about Khadi's cultural and environmental significance among the fashion community driving the importance to adopting sustainable practices. These innovative ventures are reigniting people's affection for Khadi, forming a dynamic movement that blends tradition with a modern ethos.

Ensuring Authenticity

Khadi, derived from the Sanskrit word 'Khadira,' denoting cloth crafted from hand-spun yarn, encapsulates the essence of natural fabrics fashioned through hand-spinning and hand-weaving techniques, utilising materials such as cotton, silk, jute, wool, or their blends, all of which must originate within India. It encompasses the entire traditional process, including spinning, weaving, and finishing. Beyond its comfort, providing cooling relief in summer and warmth in winter, Khadi boasts an environmentally friendly nature.

To safeguard the authenticity of Khadi products, stringent measures have been implemented. The Khadi Mark, affixed to handwoven, handspun Khadi and its products in accordance with the Khadi Mark Regulation of 2013 under the KVIC Act, is a hallmark of genuineness and quality assurance. The Central Certification Committee (CCC) plays a pivotal role in verifying the authenticity of Khadi products.

From Tradition to Economic Powerhouse

The Khadi and Village Industries Commission (KVIC) has achieved unprecedented milestones, surpassing the turnover of even the best FMCG companies in India. In the fiscal year 2022-23, KVIC recorded an impressive turnover of Rs. 1.34 lakh crore, a remarkable leap from Rs. 31,154 crores in 2013-14. A staggering 332% growth in the sale of indigenous Khadi products has been witnessed between 2013-14 and 2022-23. Among these, Khadi fabrics have particularly excelled, with production soaring from Rs. 811 crore in 2013-14 to Rs 2,916 crore in 2022-23, representing a remarkable 260% growth. Sales of Khadi clothing have surged by 450%, rising from Rs 1,081.04 crore in 2013-14 to Rs 5,942.93 crore in 2022-23. The artisans associated with the Khadi sector have significantly benefited from this surge in production and sales, witnessing a more than 150% increase in their remuneration since 2013-14.

Financial assistance, modernisation of infrastructure such as charkhas and looms, digitisation, and the development of new technology and designs through research and development (R&D) have all contributed significantly to the growth of Khadi and Village Industries products. In 2021, KVIC unveiled eKhadiIndia.com, a unique government online platform featuring over 50,000 products aimed at strengthening the rural economy and promoting self-sustainability. The 'Vocal for Local' campaign has catapulted Khadi to new heights of popularity both domestically and abroad.

In recent years, KVIC has focused on creating sustainable employment for artisans and unemployed youth, achieving significant milestones. In 2022-23, KVIC created 9.5 lakh jobs in rural areas, compared to 5.6 lakh jobs in 2013-14. KVIC also conducts Skill Development Programmes (SDP) and Entrepreneurship Awareness Programmes (EAP) across the country to generate self-employment opportunities in traditional industries for unemployed youth.

Conclusion:

As Khadi weaves itself into contemporary fashion, it honors tradition while empowering artisans, fostering economic sustainability, and aligning with India's self-reliance goals. This revival envisions harmony between tradition and modernity, celebrating heritage while propelling progress.

The Khadi industry represents more than India's struggle for independence and cultural heritage; it plays a pivotal role in driving economic progress, promoting employment, and nurturing sustainable development. Through its support of Khadi, India reaps a range of social, economic, and environmental benefits, contributing to the nation's overall advancement. Khadi's revival within India's fashion landscape exemplifies the seamless interplay of tradition and modernity. Formerly a symbol of defiance and self-sufficiency, it now embodies sustainability and conscious consumption. Its presence in contemporary fashion underscores its adaptability and relevance, reminding us of the enduring influence of heritage, craftsmanship, and conscious fashion choices in shaping the evolving fashion narrative.

Gandhian Perspective: Solutions to Present Day ...

Politics: For Gandhi, politics was a practice of ethics and spirituality in public sphere. Politics was required to mobilise people and bring about desirable changes. But this political mobilisation must be based on non-violence.

Passive Resistance: It was a unique technique devised by Gandhi to fight injustice. In his own words, "Passive resistance is a method of securing rights by personal suffering; it is the reverse of resistance by arms. When I refuse to do a thing that is repugnant to my conscience, I use soul-force."

Satyagraha: It is a combination of truth and non-violence. It is a method to bring the adversary to confront the situation, and meet eye-to-eye on the dispute, and redress the wrong without inflicting violence on the other party. The unique thing about satyagraha in conflict resolution is the fact that there is no ill-will against the opponent. Nelson Mandela defeated apartheid and yet shared power with them by making South Africa what is called a "rainbow nation", i.e., a nation having many textures, colours comprising races, groups etc.

Swaraj: Gandhi's concept of democracy was a decentralised swaraj. He wrote: "Independence must begin at the bottom. Let every village be a republic having full powers. Every village has to be self-contained and capable of managing its own affairs." But such independence was not based on isolation, rather interaction among them. Gandhi was opposed to a highly centralised state as it was based on coercion and violence. Thus, the essence of Gandhian swaraj lies in economic and political decentralisation.

Gandhian Economics of Sustainable Development

"Economics which departs from or is opposed to ethics is no good and should be renounced," this statement by Gandhi clearly articulates his economic philosophy:

For Gandhi, economics stands for social justice; it promotes the good of all. He was opposed to the machine led industrial economies of the western nations which promoted insatiable greed for wealth. As the limited resources could not satisfy everyone's greed, violence to own them became inevitable. Gandhi suggested a humane path to economic progress to meet basic needs rather than multiplying wants and chasing them in a blind competition. For Gandhi, village self-reliance was essential for swaraj and economic democracy. Production must meet local needs first. A village must be self sufficient to meet its basic needs of education, health, water, and sanitation. However, he did not advocate complete isolation of the villages from the rest of the world. Gandhi said, "I do not want to stay in a house with all its windows and doors closed. I want a house with all its windows and doors open where the breeze of all lands and cultures blow through my house. But, I refuse to be blown off my feet by any."

Trusteeship

Gandhi had conceptualised the modern idea of Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) much earlier in his trusteeship scheme meant for the entrepreneurs. It reconciled the need for individual entrepreneurship to the social need. Trusteeship required that the creators of wealth should not consider their entire wealth as their own, but as that belonging to society from where it comes. After meeting their individual needs, they must spend it on the weak and deprived. They could either spend it directly or, by giving it to charities. Gandhi even stood for legislation by government, if required, to meet the goals of trusteeship. Today, exactly the same has happened. CSR has been made mandatory in India by amending the Company Act, 2013. The following conclusions emerge from Gandhi's idea of trusteeship:

- Trusteeship is a means of transforming the present capitalist order into an egalitarian one.
- It does not recognise any right of private ownership of property except in so far as it may be permitted by society for its own welfare.
- Legislative regulation can be permitted for ownership and use of wealth.
- Under regulated trusteeship, an individual shall not be permitted to hold and use wealth in disregard of the interest of the society.

For Gandhi, it was not enough just to create wealth ethically, but also to be spent altruistically to meet social needs, and not individual, selfish needs. This was the core of his idea of trusteeship.

Gandhi sought to touch every aspect of life and offer noble solutions to our problems of existence. Today, when the world is torn apart by hatred, violence, terrorism, wars, environmental degradation, unchecked greed, unsustainable lifestyle, Gandhi stands as a source of hope for humanity.

BEST ENTRY FOR

ISSUE DATED 9 - 15 September 2023

Question: What is your opinion on the G20 Leaders' Summit 2023 and the declaration they have made? How might this shape a better future for the world in your view?

Nishat Bhatotia
Gurugram

Ultimately, it was India's leitmotif of multilateralism, multipolarity, 'middle path' and abjuring alliances on global discord that won the G20 day at 'Bharat Mandapam'. What marked the zenith of India's G-20 presidency was the inclusion of the African Union as a permanent member.

The Indian presidency yielded major deliverables and outcomes, with larger ramifications for the emerging global order. The creation of a new Working Group on Empowerment of Women, Global Digital Public Infrastructure Repository for bridging technological divide, established Start-up 20 Engagement Group-recognising start-ups and MSMEs as engines of global growth, among others. Laudably, the Indian presidency worked on harmonising development with the environment, stating that "no country should have to choose between fighting poverty and fighting for our planet."

The Leaders' Declaration is highly ambitious and wide-ranging, when assessed on the yardstick of consensus, additionality and implementability. Whether it is the emphasis on equitable climate finance, reform of Multilateral Development Banks and international financial institutions, managing global debt vulnerabilities, pro-innovation approach towards Artificial Intelligence and crypto assets, food security and gender equality.

To conclude the Indian presidency strengthened the G-20 itself as an organisation, one of the only remaining organisations that include the western bloc, the Russia-China combine, and the "non-aligned" members. It ushered G-20 as a more representative, inclusive, and egalitarian model of global governance in comparison to the shibboleths of post-World War II order. The winds of global governance are increasingly blowing towards the 'South' of the Brandt Line, in tandem with 'Vasudhaiva Kutumbakam' resonating globally.
